For example:

German attributive adjectives have four cases: nominative, accusative, dative, and genitive. The case of the adjective depends on the case of the noun it modifies. The table below summarizes the declension of attributive adjectives in German:

I Case I	Masculine I	Feminine I	Neuter I	Plural I	I--- --- --- --- --- I
Nominative I	-er I	-e I	-es I	-e I	Accusative I
					-en I
					-e I
					-es I
					-en I
					Dative I
					-en I
					-en I
					Genitive I
					-en I
					-er I
					-es I
					-er I

Example:

Attributive adjectives in German must agree with the noun they modify in terms of gender, number, and case. This means that the adjective's ending changes to match the gender, number, and case of the noun.

Example:

I Noun I	Gender I	Number I	Case I	Adjective I	I--- --- --- --- --- I
Hund I
Masculine I
Singular I
Nominative I				großer I
Bücher I
Neuter I
Plural I
Accusative I				alte I

Like any language, German has its exceptions to the rules. Here are a few common exceptions to the declension of attributive adjectives:

- Adjectives ending in -el, -en, and -er: These adjectives do not change their ending in the nominative and accusative cases.
- Adjectives with the suffix -ig: These adjectives have the same ending in all cases except the nominative masculine, where they have the ending -er.

Example:

- Nominative: ein netter Mann (a nice man)
- Accusative: Ich sehe einen netten Mann. (I see a nice man.)
- Nominative: ein hungriger Hund (a hungry dog)
- Accusative: Ich füttere einen hungrigen Hund. (I feed a hungry dog.)

To solidify your understanding of German attributive adjectives, let's practice with some examples:

Translate the following sentences into German:

1. The red car is parked in front of the house.
2. I bought a new green dress.
3. The children are playing with the brown ball.

German Translations:

1. Das rote Auto steht vor dem Haus.
2. Ich habe ein neues grünes Kleid gekauft.

3. Die Kinder spielen mit dem braunen Ball.

Congratulations on embarking on your journey to master German attributive adjectives!
