Legal and Ethical Responsibilities of Physical Therapists

Exclusively available on IvyPanda

In the recent past, as a result of the increased autonomy of physical therapists in executing their duties, there has been an increase in the number of ethical and legal responsibilities of individuals in this profession. Unlike in the past when the duties of physical therapists were few, nowadays physical therapists are not only supposed to provide medical care to patients but also they are supposed to manage aides and other health care professionals.

Further, nowadays there exist numerous business opportunities that physical therapists can venture in, while still serving a health care institution. As a result of these changes profession, numerous legal and ethical questions arise every day as concerns the patient's independence and delivery of quality service. Therefore, to ensure that practitioners in this field conform to the new developments by performing their duties to desired standards with integrity, there exist several legal and ethical responsibilities, which every physical therapist is supposed to respect. Without these responsibilities, the entire physical therapy practice will be in jeopardy, as there will be no criteria for differentiating right and wrong actions. This article will discuss the ethical and legal responsibilities of physical therapists (Triesenberg, 1996, 1098-1099).

The first ethical responsibility of physical therapists is that of respecting and upholding high standards of dignity when dealing with clients regardless of their age, ethnicity, nationality, gender, or health condition. Practitioners in this field are supposed to respect every individual's rights and treat them equally without any form of biasness. The second responsibility of practitioners in this profession is dealing with patients with the utmost care while ensuring that they build the desired level of confidence in their clients.

This involves acting in the best interest of patients, maintaining high standards of confidentiality of the patient's information, and ensuring that the patients are provided with the required information that will help them to make informed decisions about their health. Practitioners in this field are also supposed to be accountable for any judgments they make about their patients; hence, they need them to make decisions that are
